

Rimax Security Phone – Wireless Home & Office Alarm system

February 8th, 2007 under Gadgets

For those of you that are afraid of break-ins into your house and don't want professional help from a specialized company you should know that you can be alerted of unauthorized entries by using the Rimax Security Phone. As they say, it's very easy to install it, because it uses two wireless magnetic door and window sensors with passive infrared to detect movements and a remote control unit that incorporates a panic button. The whole home or office surveillance system works on a 50m range, and when the two sensors detect unauthorized entries they trigger the phone that will make, up to three calls to one of the five pre-selected phone numbers playing a recorded message.

Programming the alarm on is as easy as pressing some keys combinations on the phone or using the remote control unit directly. This is a perfect solution for those that plan to spend a lower price, because the Rimax Security Phone and the two sensors cost only £129.99 and is available immediately.
